	Morning	Afternoon	Morning	Afternoon
Mixing Height/ Atmosphere	Mixing height greater than 1,000 ft, with a neutral to unstable atmosphere	Mixing height greater than 1,000 ft, with a neutral to unstable atmosphere	Late morning mixing height greater than 1,500 ft with a neutral to unstable atmosphere. (Burning will not begin if morning inversion layer is not expected to allow for a mixing depth of 1,500 ft within 2 hours of ignition.)	Mixing height greater than 1,500 ft, with a neutral to unstable atmosphere
Burn Activity Sequence	The prescribed burn timing is that the burn will begin at 7-8 a.m. Active burning will be completed by 1 p.m. After 1 p.m. the burn will be in the smoldering phase. Following burning the burn team will begin mop-up and patrol operations		Prior to actual burning, a test burn will be performed. The test burn will validate smoke rise and dispersion, which will allow the burn team to assess whether burning should continue or be delayed. The test burn will also give the burn team indications of fire behavior. The test burn will show spread, consumption, and movement of the fire through the fuel bed. The prescription variables guide planning of the burn, but the test fire will demonstrate the appropriateness of the prevailing conditions. The preferred prescribed burn timing is that the burn will begin in the morning, as soon as the prescriptive weather and fuel moisture variables are met. Active burning will be completed in the afternoon. Active burning will be stopped if the Marina profiler detects a stable low-lying air mass (sea breeze). After the active burning, the smoldering phase will begin. Following burning, the burn team will begin mop-up and patrol operations.
